6. THE WE WILL NEVER USE ROOTS PROBLEM

Several times while teaching remedial mathematics students mention that they'll never use square roots or cube roots in their life. Instead of boring them with examples of using square roots and cube roots I upped the ante by stating Astronomers commonly use fifth roots when working with brightness of stars. Can you figure out how much brighter the star named Sirius is than the star named Polaris?